We are delighted to announce the complete program for the launch conference of Denmark's Research Portal, featuring an exciting lineup of speakers. We are overwhelmed by the great interest in participation, and we are pleased to welcome you all at the Ovnhallen at CBS - a fantastic conference venue with ample space for all participants.

Registration for the conference will close on March 1. While we still have a few available seats, they are filling up fast. Don't miss out on securing your spot -register now using the provided link.

March 1 also marks the deadline for submitting poster proposals. We encourage you to take this opportunity to contribute your good ideas and interesting projects. For more information about the Poster Reception, relevant themes, etc., please visit the conference page.

February sneak release

As mentioned in our previous newsletter, we have prepared a sneak release of two new databases that you can start exploring:

Global Data: A database offering cross-searching across the current three commercial global data sources. Here, you do not need to choose which source to search in - the search can be conducted across all global sources.

Local Data: A database offering cross-searching of data from local institutional data providers. The database provides access to search in an integrated version of the local data without duplicates, which provides a better overview and more precise searches.

Please note that these are test versions that we will refine in the period leading up to the official launch. While there may be minor details that are not yet fully clear, we encourage you to explore the databases, try them out, and if you encounter any issues or errors, please let us know at nora.info@dtu.dk.

New website

We are pleased to announce the launch of our new website. While we have made significant progress, some final touches and missing texts in the English version are still being addressed. All content will be finalized in connection with the official launch on March 21. We have especially improved the "About" pages, which now contain more comprehensive content as well as technical documentation. We hope you will warmly welcome the new website.

Communication

In connection with the launch of Denmark's Research Portal and its new services, we value your input on the portal's communication initiatives you would like to see in the coming year. To ensure that our plans align with your needs, we have created a short questionnaire for you to fill out.

As always, we welcome your questions, feedback, and ideas at nora.info@dtu.dk. We look forward to seeing many of you at the Research Portal's launch.
